Yearly Commentary on the Financial Markets

United States

In quarter three of 2021, US economic recovery slowed down, interest rates rose and real household income fell due to high inflation. The main business indicators (ISM) showed continued business growth, but at a much slower pace, while household confidence indicators remained very poor. The figures for the Real Estate sector, notoriously sensitive to interest rates, were particularly discouraging. On the other hand, job creation remained strong, the unemployment rate low and the labour market saw the return of many workers who had given up looking for work during the pandemic. Inflation fell slightly in July and August compared to June, but remained at a very high level (core inflation rose again in August). The US Federal Reserve (Fed) continued its monetary tightening (two 0.75% increases in Fed Fund rates in July and September) and clearly stated its intention to prioritise anti-inflation measures, even if this were to have negative consequences to the labour market.

In quarter four, US economic activity accelerated again after the slowdown at the end of Q3. Monthly figures and economic surveys confirmed the positive momentum in the private sector, with industrial and service companies reporting a marked improvement in the business climate. Production volumes, however, remained constrained by severe supply chain disruptions and intermediate product shortages, despite some signs of improvement during the fourth quarter. Retail sales rose by 0.3% in November after an increase of 1.7% in October, while industrial production rose 0.5%. The unemployment rate was 4.2% in November, down from 4.6% in October as the labour market continued to improve. Inflation accelerated in November to 6.8% year-on-year, buoyed by base effects and temporary factors but also by more structural causes. Jerome Powell was confirmed for a second term as Chair of the Federal Reserve. In December, the Federal Reserve announced that the pace of reduction of its asset purchases would be doubled in January to USD 30 billion per month, with net purchases scheduled to end in March.

At the start of quarter one of 2022, economic figures showed a slowdown in activity and mobility in January, due to the spread of the Omicron variant. However, the situation improved from February. Business sentiment indicators followed the same trend, despite industry indicators pointing to a slowdown, while the US labour market continued to strengthen. Despite the beginning of a resolution of bottlenecks to global trade, upward price pressures remained high due to large imbalances between supply and demand. Consumer confidence surveys (such as the Conference Board consumer confidence survey) identified concerns about the future economic picture, likely due to the soaring energy prices and the war in Ukraine. The significant increase in household inflation expectations was reflected in the acceleration of the consumer price index, which stood very close to 8% year-on-year in February.

In quarter two of 2022, the US economy was slowing as evidenced by deteriorating consumer confidence and persistent inflation (affecting disposable income), led by high Energy and Services costs. The latest consumer inflation for the month of May came in at a 40-year high, maintaining pressure on the Fed to respond to an issue which has become political in the country as President Biden faces mid-term elections this year. The Fed hiked policy rates by 75 bps in June, and was expected to remain on the tightening trajectory in the near term. However, pressures continued to build up on US economic growth as the Manufacturing PMI for June declined. As a result, the Fed's task was getting difficult in light of its dual mandate to balance price stability with economic growth. Nonetheless, strong labour markets and low unemployment rates mean overall consumption was robust.

Eurozone

In the Eurozone, the economic environment deteriorated significantly in quarter three of 2021. The Eurozone economy, already grappling with record inflation, monetary tightening and the fallout from the slowdown in China, was further challenged by the sharp rise in natural gas prices following the drastic reduction in Russian supplies. At the end of the quarter, there were fears of a looming Eurozone recession against the backdrop of the energy crisis. Business confidence indicators moved into slightly negative territory, while household confidence indicators, already at record lows, continued to fall. The labour market, on the other hand, remained buoyant, with the unemployment rate at its lowest level since the creation of the Eurozone. The rise in inflation reached the 10% threshold in September 2021. After raising its key interest rates by 0.50% in July (the first increase since 2011), the European Central Bank (ECB) raised them again in September by 0.75%. The ECB signalled its intention to continue this bullish cycle to fight inflation, despite the worsening outlook for growth.

Economic activity decelerated in the Eurozone at the end of the fourth quarter, as confirmed by monthly figures and economic surveys, due to the sharp rise in Covid-19 cases. Supply chain disruptions continued to weigh heavily on industrial production, along with shortages of intermediate products and strong upward pressure on prices. However, signs of possible easing emerged over the course of the fourth quarter across the Eurozone. Retail sales were up 0.2% in October (+1.4% YoY), while industrial production rose by 1.1% (+3.3% YoY). The labour market continued to improve in quarter four, with the unemployment rate falling to 7.3% in October, from 7.4% in September. Inflation accelerated to 4.9% in November due to base effects, severe international trade disruptions, rebounding demand and a strong upward contribution from energy prices. The ECB announced a considerable reduction in its purchases: the pandemic emergency purchase programme was to be continued in quarter one of 2022 "at a slower pace than in the previous quarter" before coming to an end in March 2022, its asset purchase programme then to be gradually reduced as well.

Eurozone GDP figures published in late January showed a significant slowdown in economic growth in the Eurozone during quarter four of 2021: German GDP contracted, while GDP in France, Spain and Italy grew much less than during quarter three. Figures for quarter one 2022 showed a further slowdown in activity at the very start of the year due to the spread of the Omicron variant. However, from mid-January, business and consumer surveys and mobility data indicated a significant improvement. PMI indices showed that Services in particular suffered in January and rebounded in February, while the Industrial sector was steadier. However, March saw further deterioration due to the war in Ukraine: the Manufacturing PMI fell to a 14-month low, standing at 56.5. The labour market continued to improve, but inflation was a growing problem for households, with the consumer price index hitting new highs as energy prices continued to rise. Soaring commodity prices and the sanctions imposed due to the war in Ukraine considerably increased the risk of stagflation in the Eurozone, where a recession and sustained inflation above 5% were a plausible scenario.

In the second quarter of 2022, stagflationary fears gained momentum in the Eurozone after prices rose and growth outlook came under pressure, aggravated by geopolitical tensions and Russia's decision to disrupt gas supply. As global leaders discussed ways to wean themselves from Russian gas in the long-term and reinforce defence lines in Eastern Europe, the near term ramifications became apparent. While the latest composite EZ PMI reading came in at its lowest level in more than a year, consumer prices rose 8.6% (year on year) in June. The effects of this decline in people's purchasing power were also felt in French politics. President Macron lost his majority after the second round elections. On the other hand, the ECB's task was getting difficult as it tried to balance controlling inflation (partially caused by supply-side constraints) with preventing fragmentation across the EU. Lastly, the ECB decided to end its net asset purchases under its asset purchase programme and created a new anti-fragmentation tool.

Emerging markets

In China, while economic growth was weak in the second quarter of 2021 due to Covid restrictions, it appeared to be picking up again in the summer of 2021 with the easing of measures designed to contain the pandemic, as well as a softening of monetary and fiscal policy. However, the Chinese authorities announced further restrictions of movement ahead of the Party Congress in mid-October. Overall, for the rest of the emerging markets, this quarter three of 2021 was marked by downward revisions to growth prospects. This played out against a backdrop of: i) high inflation and tightening global and domestic monetary conditions, which are increasingly impacting on domestic demand, ii) a slowdown in global trade, as well as iii) forecasts of a recession in the Eurozone and weaker than expected growth in the US. Due to the European energy crisis and rising prices, the economic slowdown seemed more pronounced in Central and Eastern Europe than in Latin America. The economic situation in Asia remained stable. Inflation figures, on the other hand, were very high and rising overall, despite some level of stabilisation or decrease in some countries, such as Brazil. Unsurprisingly, the central banks in emerging countries continued to raise rates (except for Russia and Turkey), while latecomers finally joined the trend (Thailand, Indonesia, etc.). While the scope for interest rate increases has grown in Asia, in other emerging countries (Brazil, Hungary, Czech Republic, etc.) the end of the cycle may have been reached. However, in the Czech Republic and Hungary, inflation was still running at double-digit levels.

The outlook for emerging economies continued to worsen in quarter four of 2021 and quarter one of 2022, even though the gap with advanced economies remained favourable to the former. The Chinese economy, penalised by the political constraints imposed at the beginning of quarter four, posted a slight recovery. Chinese policymakers provided a surprise at the end of the year by re-establishing a broadly accommodating monetary policy (through an RRR cut of 50 bp). They also indicated that stability of growth via domestic demand would be the priority of their policy in 2022. With regard to inflation, with the exception of Asia where inflationary pressures were contained, inflation figures were still at very high levels, well above the central banks' targets in some countries, forcing central banks to continue or amplify their tight monetary policy. Rising energy, oil and food prices and supply chain disruptions remained the main causes of these high levels of inflation. Domestic factors were also fuelling these inflationary pressures: increases in real estate prices and wages, currency depreciation, etc. The end of the period was marked by more uncertainty due to the rapid spread of the Omicron variant. Some countries again introduced health measures that restricted people's mobility.

In quarter two of 2022, emerging markets presented a diverging economic environment where inflation and central bank policies were in limelight. In China, the government's zero-tolerance Covid policy negatively affected economic activity. As a result, the Chinese central bank cut policy rates in May to support growth. While the June manufacturing PMI came in strong, the Chinese growth outlook was still shrouded by Covid policies. On the other hand, the Reserve Bank of India raised policy rates 50 bps in June, to control inflation. Elsewhere, Latin American exporters benefited from high commodity prices but continued to face persistent inflation. In Brazil, in addition to monetary tightening, there was fiscal support to offset the impact of high prices. Geopolitics and Russia's invasion of Ukraine continued to impact the cost of food and commodities in Eastern European countries. Meanwhile, the Russian central bank reduced rates multiple times to save the Russian economy, which was reeling from western sanctions. In contrast, in Turkey, the political leadership vowed to pursue unorthodox policies to bring prices under control.
